NYC BY MOOD / ASSIGNMENT 4

Style Tile

A small visual system for one thoughtful Manhattan recommendation at a time.

INSTRUCTOR FEEDBACK ADDRESSED

Added a recommendations view and one individual listing view. Both are shown at mobile and desktop widths, completing the flow while keeping one recommendation on screen at a time.

Selection → Single recommendation → Place detail

One thoughtful pick. No endless lists.

Made for little detours in Manhattan.

RESPONSIVE NOTES

- 01 / Navigation

  Mobile keeps the brand and a 48 × 48 menu button. Desktop exposes Explore and How it works in a horizontal navigation, reducing the extra tap.

- 02 / Hero + entry action

  The headline, introduction, and illustration stack on mobile. Desktop places the illustration alongside the text and increases the H1 from 40 to 56 px for a balanced opening.

- 03 / Mood selection

  The six choices stay in two columns at both widths. Wider desktop controls preserve the same order and make the selected state easy to compare.

- 04 / Place category

  The six category tiles keep a three-column grid. On desktop the category section sits beside mood and area, so all three decisions are visible together.

- 05 / Manhattan area

  Area choices stay in a two-column grid; mobile puts this section after the category options. Desktop uses the third column without changing the available areas.

- 06 / Summary + primary action

  Mobile puts the full-width action below the selected choices. Desktop aligns the summary left and the action right, connecting the selection to the next step.

RESPONSIVE NOTES

- 01 / Navigation + return

  Mobile uses the menu button and a separate return action. Desktop shows full navigation, while the same return action preserves the way back to preferences.

- 02 / Heading + active choices

  Mobile wraps the heading over two lines with the chosen filters below. Desktop uses one headline line; all three filters stay visible so the match is understandable.

- 03 / Illustration

  Mobile places the illustration above the place information. Desktop gives it the left side of a two-column layout; there is still only one recommendation.

- 04 / Place information

  Name, neighborhood, category, mood tags, and description appear in both versions. The desktop text column is capped at 520 px to avoid long lines.

- 05 / Actions + refresh

  Mobile stacks View this place and Try another as 56 px controls. Desktop puts them side by side; the Google Maps action remains available without opening details.

- 06 / Supporting copy + footer

  The refresh note stays close to the action it explains. Both layouts finish with the same footer; desktop uses the wider margin rather than adding more results.

RESPONSIVE NOTES

- 01 / Navigation + return

  Mobile collapses navigation into a menu; desktop expands it. The return action keeps the connection to the same recommendation in both layouts.

- 02 / Place heading + tags

  The mobile place name wraps to two lines above the neighborhood and tags. Desktop uses the wider heading and shares the metadata row to reduce vertical scanning.

- 03 / Illustration

  Mobile shows the place illustration before the description. Desktop places the illustration in a broad left column, alongside the visit information.

- 04 / Description

  Mobile places the description in the reading flow below the image. Desktop keeps it below the image with a 624 px text limit for comfortable reading.

- 05 / Visit information

  Mobile stacks address, hours, and offerings below the description. Desktop groups the same content in a right-hand panel, keeping practical information together.

- 06 / Visit action + footer

  The Google Maps action spans the mobile content width. On desktop it spans the information panel; the secondary return and footer remain available.
